

POST-WORLD WAR II GLOBALIZATION - U.S. CITIZENS LIVING OVERSEAS

Activity Items

The following items are part of this activity and appear at the end of this student version.

- Item 1: 1950 Census Form P5
- Item 2: Americans Overseas in U.S. Censuses

Student Learning Objective

- I will be able to describe changes in population data for Americans living overseas during the mid- to late 20th century.

NAME: _____ DATE: _____

A new approach to the 1950 Census was among the political responses to the changes in international relations and the rise of globalization after World War II. Prior to 1950, Americans living abroad were enumerated by the federal agency (military or civilian) that employed them — and as a result, not all Americans living overseas were counted. In 1950, U.S. citizens living abroad self-reported as part of the census.

Use Item 1: 1950 Census Form P5 and your background knowledge of the time period to answer the following questions and prompts.

1. Record several observations and questions about the item.
2. What historical events between 1940 and 1950 likely influenced the number of Americans living overseas?
3. Why do you think that the U.S. Census Bureau wanted to collect data on U.S. citizens living abroad in 1950?

4. Based on the options listed in the item, why were Americans living abroad in 1950? For what other reasons — not listed on the form — would Americans be living overseas at that time?
5. Create two questions that could have been added to the 1950 Census form to help the Census Bureau gain a better understanding of Americans living overseas at that time in history.

Use Item 2: Americans Overseas in U.S. Censuses and your background knowledge to answer the following questions and prompts.

6. Review Table 2: Americans Overseas by Type, 1830, 1840, and 1900–90. Between which two consecutive decades during the 20th century (1901–2000) did the Census Bureau see the largest increase in the total U.S. population abroad? What was going on during that time that may have caused the increase?
7. Still looking at Table 2, which specific sectors of the U.S. population living overseas grew during the time period you identified in question 6?
8. What was happening during this time period that might explain the growth of the sectors you identified in question 7?

9. Dependents — those who rely on a family member for financial support (typically children) — made up a significant proportion of the U.S. population overseas in 1960. What types of services would this group have needed while living abroad? How do Census Bureau enumerations help make clear what services Americans need?

10. Read the rest of the text in the item to learn about how the Census Bureau shifted its enumeration methods for U.S. citizens living overseas. Do you think it is important to count Americans overseas as part of the census, and do you think the method for counting members of that population matters? Explain.

Conclusion Question

Reviewing your previous answers in this activity, how do you think enumerations of Americans living overseas inform the United States of trends in globalization? Explain.

Item 1: 1950 Census Form P5

DATA COLLECTION FORMS

Form P5 - Overseas Census Report - (Front)

This inquiry is authorized by law. Your Census report can be seen only by authorized personnel and cannot be used for purposes of taxation, investigation, or regulation.

Budget Bureau No. 41-4978
Approval expires Dec. 31, 1950

FORM

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

OVERSEAS CENSUS REPORT
1950 CENSUS OF THE UNITED STATES

This form must be filled by each person who is:

1. A member of the Armed Forces, or
2. A civilian American citizen employed by the United States government who is residing overseas on April 1, 1950.

AND

DO NOT FILL THIS FORM IF YOUR PLACE OF RESIDENCE ON APRIL 1, 1950, IS IN:

Continental United States

Puerto Rico

Guam

The Territory of Hawaii

The Panama Canal Zone

The Virgin Islands of

The Territory of Alaska

American Samoa

the United States

IMPORTANT: This form should be filled where you usually reside overseas. This is the place where you generally spend most your time. If you are temporarily absent from your place of usual residence overseas, either on vacation, on temporary duty at another place, or for any other reason, you should not fill this form where you happen to be visiting. When you return to your place of usual residence you will be given a form to fill there.

ANSWER THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS

1. DATE

(Date form is filled)

2. LOCATION

(Name of country or island)

3. SERVICE SERIAL NO.

(For members of the Armed Forces only)

4. ARE ANY MEMBERS OF YOUR FAMILY LIVING WITH YOU OVERSEAS? (Check one box.)

☐ Yes ☐ No

5. CHECK THE BOX WHICH APPLIES TO YOU:

- ☐ Member of Armed Forces: Army
☐ Member of Armed Forces: Navy
☐ Member of Armed Forces: Air Force
☐ Member of Armed Forces: Marine Corps
☐ Member of Armed Forces: Coast Guard

☐ Civilian employee of _____ (Specify agency)

☐ Other _____ (Specify—such as tourist, employee of private firm, etc.)

DISTRIBUTION: Armed Forces Commanding Officers will distribute these forms to all personnel (civilian and military) assigned to their commands outside the areas listed above, but not to persons temporarily present at such stations. Members of the Armed Forces temporarily absent from the place where they are regularly assigned will be enumerated at that place when they return.

Civilian American citizens employed by United States government agencies overseas will be provided with this form by the employing agency.

Other American citizens overseas who wish to be included in this Census may apply to United States Missions or Consular Offices for copies of this form.

If additional copies of this form are needed, local distributing agencies may duplicate it.

Item 2: Americans Overseas in U.S. Censuses

Table 1. Residence Rules Pertaining to Americans Overseas: 1870-1990

[Beginning in 1820, census takers were supplied with printed instructions to clarify who should be enumerated in their district. Census years not listed below did not include residence rules for the overseas component]

U.S. Military Personnel Stationed Abroad or at Sea

1870, 1880, 1900	Enumerate at stateside home (also may have been included in overseas population in 1900)
1910-90	Do not enumerate at stateside home (included in overseas population)

Federal Civilian Employees Stationed Abroad

1900	Enumerate at stateside home (also may have been included in overseas population)
1910-30, 1950-90	Do not enumerate at stateside home (included in overseas population)

Crews of U.S. Merchant Marine Vessels at Sea

1870, 1880, 1910, 1920	Enumerate at stateside home (not included in overseas population)
1930, 1940	Enumerate officers at stateside home. Do not enumerate crews at stateside home. All merchant vessels were homeported, regardless of location, so crews were not included in overseas population
1950-90	Do not enumerate at stateside home 1950, 1960—included in overseas population if vessel was at sea or in a foreign port 1970—included in overseas population if vessel was at sea with a foreign port as its designation or in a foreign port 1980—not included in overseas population 1990—included in overseas population if vessel was sailing from one foreign port to another or in a foreign port

Private U.S. Citizens Abroad for an Extended Period

1910-40	Enumerate at stateside home (not included in overseas population)
1960-90	Do not enumerate at stateside home (included in overseas population only in 1960 and 1970)

OVERVIEW

Only twice in the first 100 years since census-taking began in the United States in 1790 were separate counts of the American overseas population reported in the decennial censuses. The 1830 census was the first to include counts for any segment of the overseas population. The total U.S. population reported for this census and for the 1840 census included persons on U.S. naval vessels at sea. It was not until 60 years later, in the 1900 census, that counts of the overseas population again were reported. Since then, overseas counts have been reported in every decennial census.

Table 2 provides historical counts of the U.S. population abroad or at sea reported in the decennial censuses, and table 3 lists the data collection forms used to enumerate components of the American overseas population.

The 1900 and 1910 censuses enumerated the U.S. population abroad on the same forms as those used stateside. The 1920 census was the first to use special forms to enumerate the population abroad. The 1930 census again enumerated Americans overseas on the general stateside population schedule.

Although microfilm of 1940 census records shows Americans abroad enumerated on census schedules, a 1950 census report stated that in the 1940 census, the War and Navy Departments provided the Census Bureau with the number of their personnel stationed abroad, and the State Department furnished counts of Americans in the diplomatic service abroad and their dependents living with them.

The 1950 census was the first to make provision for the actual enumeration of Americans abroad or at sea on special individual or household census forms. (The special 1920 form was a listing form.) The overseas groups enumerated were U.S. military personnel and Federal civilian employees, their dependents living with them, and crews of U.S. merchant vessels at sea or docked in a foreign port. The 1950 overseas enumeration was conducted through cooperative arrangements with the Departments of Defense and State and the Maritime Administration.

In the 1960 census, special census report forms were used to enumerate the same overseas groups as in 1950, again with the cooperation of the Departments of Defense and State and the Maritime Administration. In addition, for the first time (the only other being 1970), a special effort was made to obtain voluntary reports from private U.S. citizens not affiliated with the Federal Government who were abroad for an extended period. The reporting of these private U.S. citizens was not complete, however, and understated the true number of these persons abroad.

The same components of Americans overseas were included again in the 1970 census. However, counts of Army, Air Force, and Marine Corps personnel stationed abroad were based on administrative records provided by the Department of Defense (DOD), rather than by direct enumeration on census forms. Census forms were used to enumerate the following:

- Dependents living with the Army, Air Force, and Marine Corps personnel abroad
- Land-based Navy and Coast Guard personnel stationed abroad and their dependents living with them
- Crews of U.S. military vessels deployed to the 6th or 7th Fleets
- Federal civilian employees stationed abroad and their dependents living with them
- Crews of U.S. merchant vessels at sea with a foreign port as their destination or docked in a foreign port
- Private U.S. citizens living abroad for an extended period and their dependents living with them³

The 1970 census was the first in which certain categories of Americans overseas officially were included in the congressional apportionment population.⁴ In this census, the apportionment population was expanded to include certain segments of the relatively large number of U.S. citizens who were overseas at that time. These included Federal employees (both military and civilian) and their dependents living with them who resided in a U.S. commonwealth or territory or a foreign country and reported a home State.

The change in the definition of the apportionment population was made in response to bipartisan congressional concern for the substantial numbers of Americans ³As in 1960, the reporting of this group was not complete and understated the true number of these persons abroad.

⁴In most censuses, the apportionment population base is the resident population for each of the 50 States and is used to determine the number of seats allotted to each State in the U.S. House of Representatives. The apportionment population excludes the District of Columbia. By law, the Secretary of Commerce must deliver the apportionment counts to the President within 9 months of Census Day. Thus, for censuses conducted on April 1, this date would be December 31.

Enumerator instructions for the 1900-40 censuses (and perhaps some pre-1900 censuses such as 1850, 1870, and 1880) may have resulted in some Americans overseas being included in the apportionment population for these years. Enumerators were instructed in these censuses to report certain Americans abroad as residents of their stateside home. Thus, these persons would have been included in the resident population, which is used to calculate the apportionment.

who would have been enumerated in their home States on April 1, 1970, except for their assignment to duty stations overseas as military or civilian employees of the U.S. Government. In particular, the scale of U.S. activities in Southeast Asia meant unusually large numbers of military personnel were stationed overseas on Census Day.

In prior decennial censuses, the number of Federal Government personnel on duty overseas was relatively small and had never been included in the apportionment population. Attorney General J. Howard McGrath, when consulted in 1949, stated that exclusion of the overseas population from the apportionment count, as was done in 1940 and prior censuses and as was being proposed for 1950, was not contrary to the requirements of the Constitution or applicable law. The opinion stated, in part, "The Congress has vested in the Director of the Census, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, discretion to determine the manner in which inhabitants of the United States who are abroad...shall be enumerated...."

In 1969, this matter was brought to the attention of the House Subcommittee on Census and Statistics of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service (which had immediate congressional oversight of the Census Bureau) during its hearings on the "1970 Census and Legislation Related Thereto." The subcommittee, recognizing the larger numbers of U.S. military and Federal civilian personnel expected to be overseas at the time of the 1970 census, recommended that these Americans be counted in the apportionment population. Congressional questions also were raised in 1969 at hearings before the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also in 1969, the Department of Commerce sought a ruling from the Department of Justice on the legality of the proposed procedure to include certain components of the overseas population in the 1970 State apportionment totals. The opinion letter was written by then-Assistant Attorney General William Rehnquist, who perceived no objection to their inclusion and stated that "the Director of the Census may, in his discretion, validly adopt that procedure."⁵

Allocations of the 1970 overseas population for apportionment purposes were made at the State level only. Allocations were not made to subdivisions within a State, as this would have required U.S. street addresses. U.S. street address was not asked on the Overseas Census Report or the Report for Military and Maritime Personnel.

⁵In 1967, the Census Bureau had evaluated the possible effects on apportionment that would have resulted if Federal Government overseas personnel and their dependents—estimated to be somewhat fewer than 2 million persons—were included in the apportionment count. It was determined that their inclusion at that time would not have resulted in any State having its congressional representation changed since the estimated 2 million persons overseas, although a large number by itself, was less than 1 percent of the total U.S. population and had approximately the same State-by-State distribution as the resident population. The actual 1970 overseas population (1,574,537) added to the apportionment base (resident population of each State minus the District of Columbia) caused a congressional seat to be shifted from Connecticut to Oklahoma by fewer than 300 persons.

This detailed information also was not included in DOD's administrative counts, by home State of record, for Army, Air Force, or Marine Corps personnel stationed abroad. Thus, the within-State redistricting process used different numbers as its base than the between-State reapportionment.

In Bethel Park v. Stans, an appellate court held in 1971 that neither the U.S. Constitution nor the Census Act demanded allocation of persons to a particular subdivision of a State for apportionment purposes. Moreover, the court held that the Census Bureau, in determining the number of representatives to which each State was entitled, could properly allocate overseas military and Federal civilian personnel and their dependents to the State of their "home of record" and not to any political subdivision within the State.

The overseas enumerations associated with the 1950-70 censuses were necessarily conducted under operational conditions very different from those used in the stateside censuses. The decentralized and globally far-flung nature of these overseas operations prevented the utilization of most of the standard review and quality control procedures used stateside.

For the 1980 census, the Census Bureau decided not to enumerate Americans overseas directly, as had been done in censuses since 1950, but to use administrative records instead. The reasons for this departure in practice from recent past censuses were the following:

- The number of Americans overseas was much smaller than in 1970.
- There were no plans to include Americans overseas in the apportionment population, as was done in 1970. In testimony in 1976 before the House Subcommittee on Census and Population (formerly the Subcommittee on Census and Statistics) of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the Deputy Director of the Census Bureau outlined the proposed rules of residence for the 1980 census. He indicated that the Bureau did not plan to include any component of Americans overseas in the apportionment population for 1980. The subcommittee raised no objections to that proposal.
- There were no constitutional or other legal mandates requiring the direct enumeration of Americans living overseas. Title 13 of the U.S. Code stated that the census enumeration should include each State, the District of Columbia, and its territories and possessions; it did not require the enumeration of Americans living in foreign countries.
- There were no Federal program requirements for data on Americans overseas, and very little use was made of the information on Americans overseas that had been collected in past censuses. The Departments of Defense and State and, to a lesser extent, other government agencies having employees abroad, maintained their own records for these personnel.

4 OVERVIEW

AMERICANS OVERSEAS IN U.S. CENSUSES

- Data were readily available from administrative records for Americans overseas affiliated with the Federal Government. Data on overseas Armed Forces personnel, Federal civilian employees, and their dependents living with them could be obtained from the Departments of Defense and State and the Office of Personnel Management (OPM).
- Complete or even adequate counts of private Americans overseas not affiliated with the Federal Government could not be obtained in 1960 and 1970, when special efforts were made to enumerate these persons, and there was some question as to whether this universe could be properly defined. Major problems associated with obtaining an accurate count of this component included the voluntary basis on which this group had to be enumerated (respondents had to go to a U.S. embassy or consulate to obtain a form), the lack of up-to-date embassy and consulate mailing lists for Americans living in their jurisdictions, and the definitional problem of who should be included in such an enumeration.

With regard to the definitional issue, many alternatives could be considered. For example, should an enumeration of private Americans overseas include all persons with a claim to U.S. citizenship? Only U.S. citizens who intended to return to the United States? All persons born in the United States (some of whom would have gone on to become citizens of the country in which they currently resided)? Only those citizens eligible to vote? Only those tied financially to the United States, such as Social Security beneficiaries or employees of U.S. or multinational corporations? People having dual (U.S. and second-nation) citizenship?

It was believed that even if a clear operational definition of this universe could have been developed, it still would have been necessary to contact a much broader range of potential respondents in order to identify those who actually met the conceptual criteria for inclusion.

The 1990 census, for only the second time in census history, included certain components of Americans overseas in the apportionment population. The overseas components included were members of the Armed Forces, Federal civilian employees, and their dependents living with them. Counts of these persons were obtained from 30 Federal departments and agencies and were based primarily on administrative records.

A significant factor in the Census Bureau's decision to allocate segments of the overseas population to their home State for apportionment purposes was the substantial amount of bipartisan congressional support given to this matter late in the 1980 decade. Several bills requiring inclusion of overseas military personnel in the apportionment counts were introduced in both houses of the 100th and 101st Congresses.

The Department of Commerce, in an August 1989 press release, announced plans to include overseas military and civilian DOD employees in the 1990 census apportionment population. In addition, the Deputy Director of the Census Bureau testified before the House Subcommittee on Census and Population in September 1989 that the Bureau would include overseas military and civilian DOD employees and their associated dependents in the 1990 apportionment counts. He cited several reasons for the decision:

- The 1969 Justice Department opinion recognizing that the Director of the Census Bureau had discretionary authority to decide whether to include overseas Americans in the apportionment population.
- Bipartisan congressional support for including overseas military personnel.
- The DOD's decision that it could provide the necessary data to the Bureau in time to meet the December 31, 1990 deadline for reporting apportionment counts to the President.

About the time of the hearing, the DOD, with technical assistance from the Census Bureau, planned to enumerate its overseas personnel and dependents concurrent with the 1990 stateside census enumeration. These data would be used by the Bureau for inclusion in the apportionment counts and by DOD for a variety of programs.

The Deputy Director further testified that these overseas personnel and their dependents would have maintained a usual residence in the United States had they not been assigned abroad in fulfillment of their military and professional obligations.

Because of a lack of funding and other constraints, in December 1989, the DOD cancelled its plans to conduct an overseas enumeration but agreed to provide overseas counts from its existing automated administrative records. The DOD identified three alternative methods from its administrative files for determining home State affiliation of its overseas military personnel:

- Home of record—State declared by the member of the Armed Forces to be the permanent home at time of entry or reenlistment into the service. Home of record is used to determine the travel stipend granted upon discharge (derived from personnel files).
- Legal residence—State of residence a member declares for State income tax withholding purposes (derived from payroll files).
- Last duty station—State location of the facility to which the member was assigned before going overseas (derived from personnel files).

After reviewing the three data sources available in DOD records for providing counts, the Census Bureau concluded in July 1990 that DOD's "home of record" was the most consistent with the concept of "usual residence," used since 1790 as the basis for determining residency in the decennial census. Also, home of record was the concept used in allocating most overseas military personnel in the 1970 census.

In many cases, legal residence might reflect a State chosen because it had no or low taxes or one where military personnel were exempt from paying income taxes. A 1987 General Accounting Office report had indicated that a significant proportion of military personnel declared their legal residence in one of the States that did not tax personal wages or exempted all military pay from their income.

The use of last duty station, reflecting the location of the last facility to which a person was assigned, would result in counting some military personnel and their dependents in States other than their actual previous U.S. residence. For example, those assigned to the Pentagon would be counted as District of Columbia residents even though they might have actually lived in Maryland or Virginia (although physically located in Virginia, the Pentagon has a duty station of the District of Columbia).

Furthermore, one bill requiring the inclusion of overseas military personnel and dependents in the apportionment population (H.R. 4903) mandated the use of "home of record." That bill passed the House of Representatives in June 1990, and a similar proposal (S. 2675) had been referred to the appropriate Senate committee for consideration.⁶

In response to the strong congressional support for the use of home of record data, the Commerce Department decided to use those data, supplemented and improved with DOD's automated records for missing information, as the basis for including overseas military and dependents in the 1990 apportionment counts.

A June 1990 Congressional Research Service report for Congress found that allocating military personnel by State using home of record most closely resembled the State-by-State distribution of the resident population. An allocation based on last duty station varied from the resident population distribution by 10 times as much as home of record, and legal residence, by nearly 3 times as much.

In addition to the arrangement made with DOD for obtaining counts of its overseas military personnel, the Census Bureau obtained counts of overseas personnel by home State from 29 other Federal agencies. These counts were based principally on administrative records from the employing agency. The DOD also conducted a survey of its overseas civilian employees and dependents using a short, self-administered questionnaire.

As in the 1970 census, allocations of the 1990 overseas population for apportionment purposes were made at the State level only. This population was not included, therefore, in the substate counts used for redistricting because the administrative records did not contain detailed (street/place) addresses.

In May 1991, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts filed a legal challenge against the Secretary of Commerce and others. One of the issues in the case was the constitutionality and/or legality of including overseas U.S. military and Federal civilian employees and their dependents living with them in the 1990 census counts used to apportion the U.S. House of Representatives. Massachusetts lost its 11th House seat by a narrow margin as a result of the apportionment after the 1990 census. This seat, the 435th House seat allocated under the apportionment formula, was shifted to Washington State.

The 1990 census apportionment, calculated by the "method of equal proportions" that had been used since the 1940 census, assigned a priority value to each congressional seat. Constitutionally, every State starts with one seat. Under the method of equal proportions, additional seats are added to each State's delegation based on the priority value for that State's next seat relative to the other 49 States' priority values for their next seats. Using the 1990 apportionment population, Washington's 9th seat was the 435th and last seat assigned; Massachusetts' 11th seat would have been the 436th.

In February 1992, a three-judge panel of the U.S. District Court for the District of Massachusetts held that the decision of the Secretary of Commerce to include overseas military and Federal civilian employees and their dependents living with them in the apportionment counts was "arbitrary and capricious" under the standards of the Federal Administrative Procedure Act.

In an appeal by the Commerce Department, the U.S. Supreme Court in June 1992 unanimously reversed the three-judge panel's decision. Thus, the Secretary of Commerce's decision to allocate Federal military and civilian personnel serving abroad and their dependents living with them to the State population totals for purposes of apportioning the U.S. House of Representatives was allowed to stand and, as a result, Massachusetts lost a seat in the House of Representatives.

⁶Once the Census Bureau decided to include overseas military personnel and their dependents in the apportionment population, no further action was taken in the 101st Congress on this matter.

¹Excludes U.S. citizens temporarily abroad on private business, travel, etc. Such persons were enumerated at their usual place of residence in the United States as absent members of their own households. Also excludes private, non-federally affiliated U.S. citizens living abroad for an extended period, except for 1970 and 1960, which include portions of this subpopulation.

²Excludes 9,460 persons overseas whose home State was not designated and 16,999 persons overseas whose designated home "State" was a U.S. commonwealth or territory.

³Based on administrative records provided by Department of Defense.

⁴Not shown separately. Total number reported of overseas Federal civilian employees and dependents (of both military and civilian personnel) was 393,550. Based on administrative records provided by 30 Federal agencies (including Department of Defense) and survey results provided by Department of Defense.

⁵Vessels sailing from one foreign port to another or in a foreign port. Overseas status based on Census Location Report.

⁶Based on administrative records provided by Office of Personnel Management and Departments of Defense and State.

⁷For members of the Army, Air Force, and Marine Corps abroad, based on administrative records provided by Department of Defense. Crews of deployed U.S. military vessels were enumerated on Report for Military and Maritime Personnel. Land-based Navy and Coast Guard personnel abroad were enumerated on Overseas Census Report.

⁸Enumerated on Overseas Census Report.

⁹Vessels at sea with a foreign port as their destination or in a foreign port. Enumerated on Report for Military and Maritime Personnel.

¹⁰U.S. citizens living abroad for an extended period not affiliated with the Federal Government and their overseas dependents. Enumerated on Overseas Census Report.
